Thinking Critically short answer

Compare the mood of Didion's essay with Okita's poem. Which piece do you think conveys mood more powerfully? Explain why and support with the readings.

Answer: I think that Didion’s essay is definitely more powerful because in Didion's essay you can actually picture in your head Pearl Harbor and what happened. For example, when Didion said she seen the ship Arizona, in my head I could picture the ship getting bombed and all 1102 people aboard that ship dieing. It is a more powerful thought and a more powerful story to read.

My Feedback

There was more than one kind of pain caused by the war. The loss of lives on the ship is horrifying. A broken friendship between 2 innocent little girls is sad.
